In the Day's News

Newton Wesley Rowell, who may be Canada's first representative at Washington, is a leading lawyer, reformer and religious leader of Toronto and a prominent figure in politics and public affairs, having served as leader of the liberty party in the Province of Ontario and as president of the privy council.

He has been a staunch advocate of, and legislative fighter for, prohibitory legislation in Ontario and in the dominion. Workmen's compensation, factory laws, reduced hours of labor for women and children, better housing, and sound methods of taxation have all been urged by him, on the hustings and in the Ontario legislative assembly. As a citizen he is also deeply interested in the welfare of the universities and schools of Canada; and as a layman he has been an ardent supporter of Christian unity at home, and in missionary propaganda in Asia, Africa and the islands of the sea.
